Fifth Graders Learn About Environment and Conservation

Oswego County Conservation Field Day, coordinated by the Oswego County Department of Soil and Water, saw several hundred fifth-grade students from five different school districts attend. Students rotated through five of the many different outdoor classroom stations focusing on a wide range of environmental topics. Some of the presentations included: trapping, forestry, invasive species, salmon life cycle, butterflies and moths, making a canoe, turkeys and turkey calls and so much more. The program was held at Selkirk Shores State Park.

The classes went through several stations at the annual Conservation Field Day including learning about forests and trees, left, and recycling aluminum from representatives at Novelis. Elizabeth Hobbs assists the presenter with explaining the process involved.

Another station demonstrated a hand-made cedar strip canoe built by a local craftsman who showed the students the different steps it takes to create the canoe.

Fort Drum/Sandy Creek Connections

During a recent professional development day in the district, a representative from Fort Drum visited the school to share opportunities available for students and staff through the local military installation. Just a few short years ago, there were only about five students who had direct ties to the military at Fort Drum, while this year approximately 47 students are tied to active, retired or civilian employees there. The Fort Drum school liaison shared information about field trips and other opportunities that would be available through the facility.

Congratulations Katie Soluri!

The SUNY Geneseo Department of Inter-Collegiate Athletics and Recreation honored Katie Hovey Soluri by recently inducting her into the 2017 SUNY Geneseo Sports Hall of Fame class.

Students are on Fire for Chemistry

Sydney Cook participates in a series of experiments in her chemistry class including the one pictured above where bubbles of methane gas are ignited by teacher Kelly Halko. The Halloween-themed demonstrations have become an annual event and get students fired up about science.

Sandy Creek High School students won't soon forget a recent chemistry class that demonstrated scientific concepts of dehydration, combustion, decomposition and redox.

Following appropriate safety procedures, students volunteered to hold bubbles lit on fire and not get burned. This combustion reaction involves the chemical methane and bubbles produced by water vapor and oxygen gas mixed with dish soap.

Following each experiment, the students were tasked with identifying chemical equations, specific elements and chemical reactions.

To go along with the harvest season, another experiment involved catalytic decomposition of hydrogen peroxide by potassium iodide inside of a carved pumpkin! The students had to answer questions such as: is this an exothermic or endothermic reaction?

At Astronomy Night Students Look to the Sky to View Stars

"When you look into space you are looking into the past. Space is history," said Larry Slosberg, one of the local observers who brought their telescope to astronomy night for Sandy Creek students to view the night sky, planets and constellations. Volunteers from several area organizations, including CNY Observers & Observing, which promotes amateur astronomy and space science in Central New York, set up telescopes to view Saturn and its rings, the moon, seven sisters star cluster, a globular cluster and much more. The students were also able to observe several shooting stars before cloud cover ended the night. The group set up at the Mad River Club where light pollution did not impede the viewing.

Kindergarten Students Take Field Trip to Local Orchard

Students in Teira Norton’s Kindergarten class at Sandy Creek Elementary School carry their recently picked apples from the orchard during their field trip to Ontario Orchards.

Kindergarten students from Sandy Creek Elementary School took a field trip to Ontario Orchards where they toured the orchards, picked apples and toured the cider mill and apple processing facility at the local farm.

The students learned about the different varieties of apples, animals that visit the orchard and how cider is made. They also got to see how the apples are washed and brushed to clean them before they are sold.

In addition to apples, the students learned about other fruits and vegetables grown on the farm including the decorative corn that comes in all sorts of colors and variations.

The students were taken on a walking tour of the orchards before picking some apples to take home.

The students visited the orchards at the local farm where they learned about the varieties of apples and even learned about the animals that visit the orchard; some wanted and some that they have to protect the trees against in the winter months.

These girls are nearly hidden in the tree as they gather apples during their field trip to Ontario Orchards. The kindergarten classes traveled to the orchard as part of an ELA module study on farms.

First OCAY League a ‘Puzzling’ Competition!

The first Oswego County Academic Youth League (OCAY) competition of the school year left students puzzled as their deductive reasoning was tested in a series of mind-boggling puzzle challenges.

Teams of students entered the Mind Boggler Arena to put their logical reasoning to the test. The game master selected a secret, pre-set code of four color dots in a specific order, and the students were challenged to break the code.

Other tasks included timed 3D puzzles and pen/pencil visual-spatial tests.

OCAY League is coordinated through the Center for Instruction, Technology & Innovation’s gifted and talented program.
